Site Description

A police raid and arrests at an establishment in Conley, Georgia led to the discovery of a large volume of allegedly stolen fuel. A portion of the fuel, suspected to be gasoline, was being stored in plastic tote containers inside an unsecured building and also in areas outside of the building. Several thousand gallons of suspected diesel fuel were being stored in a tanker located on-site. Stained soil, the fact that the material was unsecured, and other site-specific conditions prompted Georgia EPD and Dekalb County police to request assistance from EPA. OSC Terry Tanner was dispatched to the Site on Friday morning, May 11.

EPA concurred with local police that suspected gasoline stored in the plastic (incompatible) tote containers within the open building and in the areas outside of the building constituted a potential threat of release and a fire and explosion hazard. OSC Tanner coordinated removal of the fuel through a contractor retained by Dekalb County.

Current Activities

EPA provided air monitoring and helped coordinate support during the removal of the fuel.
